

"I thought I had arrived. GQ called me a Super Christian. I had read all the right books, joined a church group, gone through the entire Bible five times, gave generously to my church, and helped the needy whenever I could. I was doing all the right things. I was light years beyond the overpaid, arrogant, stressed-out media hotshot I used to be.

I really thought I was sold out for God.

...And then I heard about the fishermen.

I didn't know it at the time, but I was being drawn into the center of a larger-than-life adventure that would shake me out of my self-righteous complacency, rock my marriage, and bring me to my knees. But would I have the guts to risk it all and trust God to carry me through?"
